A FORTUNE IN EGGS.

A Tribune correspondent says: So much has been written lately recom-mending the British system of preserving eggs that I must add my experier I have been preserving eggs for the last thirteen years with complete success by this system. In 1888 we packed what eggs we produced ourselves, between May 1st and August 7th, amounting to 417 dozen. It cost me half a cent a ozen to preserve them. I could hav sold them just as we gathered them for about 10c a dozen. I kept them till De-cember, shipped them to Philadelphia, and got, after paying for shipping and selling, 27 cents a dozen. Thirking this was a large advance for holding eggs four or five months, I concluded the next year to buy some eggs. I borrowed $315, and bought 1,400 dozen eggs at 10 cents a dozen, and 2.000 dozen at 8 cents a dozen. The material to preserve them cost $15. I sold in November and after paying back the $315 I borrowed I had $594 left for less than two months work. The $94 I expended for poultry, and laid by tl other for next year's egg trade. In 1890 I waited till eggs got down to 8 cents a dozen and invested my $500 in buying 6,400 dozen. I beld them until the holidays, and after paying for shipping and selling they averaged 2914 ceuts a dozen, or $1,888. In 1891 fixed up a packing room at a cost of $150. I borrowed $3 006, and invested $4,500 in eggs that cost me 8 cents a dozen, making 50,000 dozen eggs. In December I went to New York and helped market a large portion of the eggs myself, and got a trifle over 30 cents a dozen, or about $15 000 in all. In 1893 I moved East, located near New York and increased my business. In the summer of 1895 I preserved 52, 000 dozen which cost me about 10 cents a dozen; part of them were sold in De-cember before eggs took their rise, but the bulk of them was held until Fel ruary, and sold so that the whole lot averaged over 38 cents a dozen. Few people realize the magitude of the egg trade in the United States. I know no business that has as certain profi that preserving eggs has.
